for you: md5sum test.exe | grep ^167.213.67.175 and I got the same answer 00f7583ec6c056a5545d66bb79c6b4c2 Avicii's autopsy published Avicii, the Swedish DJ who rose to fame through his association with the Tiesto live-sets, has reportedly died after a drug overdose.

A post-mortem report published today revealed a wide range of drugs in his system, including amphetamines, cocaine and alcohol. It also revealed what seems to be a broken neck, according to reports. An ambulance was called to the DJ's Stockholm home at 10.30am on April 20.

A spokesperson for the Swedish Institute, which conducted the post-mortem, told Swedish daily newspaper, Aftonbladet: "It is an old post-mortem that has long been sealed, but we decided to study it further. There is no evidence of external violence on the body." A subsequent statement to the same paper also said that Avicii, who was 28, suffered a broken neck. It added that he died of acute toxicity, most likely after taking the drugs together with alcohol. Speaking to Swedish tabloid Expressen, a friend of Avicii's said that he had been depressed over the past year. He also said that Avicii had taken his own life. Another source, however, said that Avicii died from a heroin overdose. Avicii rose to fame after collaborating with Tiesto on many of his DJ sets, and he performed around the world with the producer. He was named
