Kutta What My Friends Do (2013) DVDRip.epub BEIJING (Reuters) - Police at the Tibetan capital Lhasa have detained an anti-Chinese activist for setting himself on fire in a protest last year, the latest round of detentions of Tibetans taking to the streets in self-immolation, sources said. Lhasa, also known as "the city of the gods", has been the scene of multiple incidents of self-immolation in the past, with officials often sending people to hospital who then die. "Yesterday, at around 11:45 a.m. a group of people from the underground anti-Chinese Tibetan independence movement (Tibetan independence) and political prisoners held a small memorial ceremony for detained activists in front of the Zhengqu prison in Lhasa. One person took a container full of gasoline and set himself on fire. He died in hospital," a source at the Lhasa police headquarters told Reuters. "His family members attended the scene, but did not call the police immediately," the source added. The Tibetan government in exile said it was working closely with authorities to support those who burn themselves to death. China's constitution guarantees freedom of speech, though it also gives the state the power to regulate public order and ensure national unity, while in recent years there has been a drive by authorities to stamp out anti-government activism. Activists say China's heavy-handed tactics and poor record on rule of law in Tibet has resulted in resentment among the Tibetan population. "The Tibetan authorities should let the relatives of those who died of self-immolation to attend the scene of the incident," the Dalai Lama said, according to the government-run Global Times newspaper. "Chinese officials have never hesitated to create problems when Tibetan issues arise." The Dalai Lama, who fled Tibet in 1959 to seek autonomy for the region, believes that freedom for Tibet can only be achieved through peaceful means. In the same month as the recent death of the first protester, Wang Xiaoning, 15 years ago, the Dalai Lama flew to Germany for medical treatment after being seriously injured by Chinese security forces in Delhi, where he was on a visit to sign a partnership agreement with India. The Dalai Lama is widely expected to visit the United States and Canada in June. (Additional reporting by Cai Yanyan in Lhasa and Ben Blanchard in Beijing, David 2d92ce491b
