Levels of vitamin D receptor, pre-receptor 25-hydroxyvitamin D-1alpha-hydroxylase, and 1alpha-hydroxylase mRNA in epiphyseal growth plate chondrocytes from cattle. There are few studies on vitamin D receptor (VDR) and 1alpha-hydroxylase (CYP27B1) mRNA expression in the growth plate in comparison with bone. Therefore, we investigated VDR, CYP27B1, and 24-hydroxylase (CYP24A1) mRNA expression in epiphyseal chondrocytes from cattle. We also investigated the effect of 1alpha,25-dihydroxyvitamin D(3) [1alpha,25(OH)(2)D(3)] treatment on the growth plate. VDR, CYP27B1, and CYP24A1 mRNA was detected in the epiphyseal chondrocytes from all four growth plates examined. The relative abundance of the 3 mRNAs was lowest in the metaphyseal growth plate chondrocytes, increased in the diaphyseal growth plate, and increased further in the distal epiphyseal growth plate. There was no marked difference in the mRNA levels between male and female chondrocytes. 1alpha,25(OH)(2)D(3) (1 nM) significantly increased VDR and CYP27B1 mRNA in the distal epiphyseal chondrocytes from growing heifers. These results suggest that local production of vitamin D metabolites in the epiphyseal cartilage by the epiphyseal chondrocytes is likely to occur in the growth plate of cattle. Molecular cloning and functional characterization of two isoforms of the membrane protein putative ankyrin-repeat domain-containing protein. Protein ankyrin-repeat domain (ARD) proteins, which are implicated in cellular signaling and membrane trafficking, contain a domain rich in repeats of ankyrin (ANK) motifs. We have cloned two isoforms of bovine ARD protein. They have 47 and 48 repeats of ANK motifs, respectively. The bovine ARD
