The weekend forecast, according to officials Written by Ken St. Andre Friday and Saturday look like they could be wet and cooler at high elevations, with the high pressure moving in from the west. On Sunday, the high will move back to the northwest with a more powerful storm system coming in from the west. The storm will be stronger and bring colder temperatures with that. Temperatures are going to be cool through the weekend, with daytime high values in the 50s, according to Weather.com. Saturday and Sunday look to be very windy, with gusts in the 15 to 25 mph range, the National Weather Service in Kansas City, Mo., said Friday. Saturday will be the most windy of the weekend, with the winds gusts in the 20 to 30 mph range. There is a 40 percent chance of precipitation Saturday, with showers and a chance of thunderstorms.
