DocX Viewer Download PC/Windows Latest

DocX Viewer is a lightweight Windows freeware developed to open docx documents without the need for Microsoft Office. As many of you probably know by now, Microsoft Office 2007 and newer versions adopted the docx document format, so older releases are unable to handle this particular extension. That's why DocX Viewer could come in very handy to many users out there. The app was developed with a single goal in mind: to open docx documents without even asking for Microsoft Office to be installed on the local computer. Of course, the application provides absolutely no editing features, so it only shows the content of a docx document and nothing more.

You're not even allowed to right click inside a document, but instead you can select the text and copy it via the "CTRL+C" keyboard shortcut. The status bar is being used to show the file size, document title, author and date, while the application comes with very basic options to enable page margin and docx file association. Just as expected, DocX Viewer leaves just a very low footprint on system performance, running smoothly on all Windows versions on the market. Which leads us to a rather simple conclusion: DocX Viewer deserves a chance, especially because Microsoft Office is such an expensive product. DocX Viewer provides just basic docx document viewing features, but at least you can copy the text you need with minimum effort. What's New • Fix various minor bugs, and improve user interface. • Improve stability. DocX Viewer 2.1 Update January 2015 Update

DocX Viewer Free Registration Code Download PC/Windows

DocX Viewer is a free, lightweight program that allows you to view Microsoft Word/Office 2007/2010 documents and PDF files. With DocX Viewer, you can view, read and even copy and paste the content of documents such as a report or an Excel spreadsheet, even if the file extension is docx. You don't even need Microsoft Office installed, which makes DocX Viewer great for those looking for an alternative to Microsoft Office or when using a portable computer or Android phone.

To open docx documents, DocX Viewer uses a simple and fast file type association. By default, docx files are automatically opened in DocX Viewer. There's no proprietary file format, but the installer includes a custom file association to associate *.docx files to DocX Viewer (this is done during the installation). To uninstall the association, you'll need to remove the original association, then remove the docx files from your computer manually. (If the association was automatically set by the installer, you'll need to remove the folder where the associations are stored.) Note: By default, the user interface of DocX Viewer is in English, so if you want to use other languages you'll need to reinstall the software. DocX Viewer is a really small application. It's about 850KB, which means there isn't any space occupied by the executable, making DocX Viewer a perfect program to install on your portable devices (the size of the installer is 10.2MB). DocX Viewer hasn't been updated in years (version 2.0 was released in 2013), so if you're looking for support you'll have to look elsewhere. DocX Viewer 2.0.1 supports the following languages: In Windows 10 and Windows 8.1 a bug in the translation of the language's 'Keyboard layout information' prevented the 'Open in Windows' dialog from opening. To remedy this, the sample docx file in this installation was configured to use a shortcut under the Window 7 and Window 8 languages but not under the Window 10 language. And for the last one... Document name is a language dependent property and in the default setting in the windows control panel the language would be selected based on the document name. However, Windows 10 changed the default behavior of the controls to be non-language sensitive. This simple fix addresses this bug. It changes the document name property to be language dependent in the registry (HKEY_CURRENT_USER\Software\Microsoft\Word\14.0\Options). For more information, please refer to the release notes.
