. They do not even check for example if people disable related pop-up modules. They also started to find out that their plans end up by the end of the day, the day before or at an hour after the originals end. By the end of 2015, about 500.000 users were affected by the XSS flaw, the vast majority of the affected customers were located in the US with about two thirds of the whole market.

The German market got hit particularly hard with about 300.000 affected customers. In comparison, the XSS flaw was not that important for banks around the world. The glitch only affects customers who use the Russian version of Yandex.Money. The Russian version of Yandex.Money is supposedly the most secure because it is not connected to other services such as email accounts, forums or social network accounts. The customers have not been notified of the problem but nobody seems to be responsible for their money at the moment. At the end of 2015, John Martellaro of eSays Consulting, a leading IT consulting firm specializing in online payment systems, compared the Yandex.Money bug to high profile security flaws such as the OpenSSL vulnerability, the Heartbleed Bug and the flaw in the Microsoft Internet Explorer browser. To date, the Russian security firm Group-IB estimates the total damage caused by the flaw to the industry to be as large as $20 billion.

Yandex.Money The most recent Yandex.Money flaw happened on February 16, 2016, some merchants are still affected but the majority of people who entered their account details on February 27 were already victims of this scam. The threat actors managed to access the victim's registered email address and the password. The attackers logged in to the customers' accounts, changed the users' contact details and created new virtual cards with the money stolen from the users. All fraudulent orders had an invoice date of January 1, 2016. Therefore, the people affected by the flaw have not yet received any bills from their bank. The payment platforms affected by the Yandex.Money scam are Yandex, Alipay, Webmoney, PayPal, Skrill, TrustPay and CHASEPay. These are all e-payment services that have at least 95 percent of the e-commerce market share in Russia. The compromised data included the user's postal code, telephone, email address, date of birth

Q: Help me to understand how this circuit works and derive the equation for the output I was doing some homework and encountered this circuit with a question related to it. I am lost right after I draw the schematic. I have never seen this kind of circuit before and I am sorry if this is a stupid question. Here is the circuit and question: My first impression was that there were 2 resistors. So I drew the equivalent circuit. Here is the question: As I said, I am lost with the first part of the question. How can I derive the equations for  $I$ ,  $V_1$ ,  $V_2$  and  $V_3$ ? Thanks in advance! A: From your circuit, it is obvious that output current is too much. So, you have assumed the intermediate node is biased with an excess bias voltage which can be dropped across  $R_1$  and  $R_2$ . I just will assume it has. So, from the equations you have,  $I = 20\text{mA}$ , and  $V_3 = 5\text{V}$ ,  $R_2$  can be of any value so you can remove it.  $R_3$  can be anything too. Hence, after simplifying, you get  $I(V_1 - V_2) = 20 \text{ mA} \times 0.5 (V_1 - V_2) = 10 \text{ mA}$  from which you can get the required input voltage. Same can be said about  $V_2$ . That's all for now.
