Q: Check if a value exists in one array and not the other I want to check if a user input value exists in one array and not the other. My two arrays are continents and countries. I would like to check if a user inputted value is present in either the continents or countries. If not present in either array, then I would like for it to display an error msg. private static void checkInput() { Scanner scan = new Scanner(System.in); String userAnswer; String continent; String country; System.out.print("input continent: "); continent = scan.next(); System.out.print("input country: "); country = scan.next(); String[] continentsArray = {"Africa", "Asia", "Europe", "North America", "South America"}; String[] countriesArray = {"Afghanistan", "Albania", "Argentina", "Armenia", "Azerbaijan"}; if (continent!="North America" && continent!="South America" && continent!="Europe") { System.out.println("You entered an invalid continent."); System.out.println("Valid continents: " + continentsArray); } if (countriesArray.contains(country) &&!continent.contains(country)) { System.out.println("You entered an invalid country."); System.out.println("Valid countries: " + countriesArray); } } A: You can't use!continent.contains(country) because country is a String so it's not a boolean. If you want to make a check if both are not empty or the other is not empty and only if they have nothing in common, you can do it like this: private static void checkInput() { Scanner scan = new Scanner(System.in); String userAnswer; String continent; String country;

Public health officials are investigating a case of botulism associated with tromboned scallops from a region of Maryland that is also the source of shellfish illnesses traced to a strain of bacteria that can cause trichinosis. The Maryland Department of Health and Mental Hygiene said on Thursday that the state's Division of Public Health is investigating a report of a "probable case" of botulism in Prince George's County. The health department said the symptoms — weakness, diarrhea, and potentially a loss of muscle tone — are indicative of food-borne botulism, a rare but serious intestinal illness. The department said the product that may be tainted is tromboned scallops sold at restaurant and online establishments. Public health officials are urging people who purchase or eat the scallops to seek medical attention immediately if they experience the symptoms. State and federal officials have identified a strain of the bacteria Clostridium botulinum that causes about 70 percent of all cases of food-borne botulism in the United States. The bacteria generally grows in marine environments, particularly in the sediment of ocean waters. Maryland inspectors have found the toxin-causing bacteria in other shellfish collected from the region. The state's Department of Agriculture this summer banned the sale of shellfish that have come in contact with the bacteria, along with algal blooms that could produce a dinoflagellate toxin. The department also banned the use of antibiotics in aquaculture production.

Singapore's National University of Singapore (NUS) scientists, in cooperation with scientists in Italy, have made a breakthrough in the recent discovery of HIV. By sequencing the complete viral genome, the team found a new type of HIV-1 that has been circulating in Southeast Asia, largely due to multiple migration of people from the Philippines and Indonesia. This is the first case of an HIV strain that is rapidly spreading throughout Asia. "HIV spread around the world through men who had sex with men, not women," said Dr. Corinne Lubbe, co-author and a research fellow at the NUS School of Biological Sciences. "In recent years, we have seen that the virus is moving eastward. Now we have the first strain of HIV found in Southeast Asia." Published in the New England Journal of Medicine, this study provides a comprehensive picture of the genetic diversity of HIV-1
