* A desktop window manager that takes full advantage of the advanced features in the Nvidia driver such as window and workspace management. Additionally, NVregistry has been redesigned to utilize the powerful capabilities of this new driver. Yes. The reasons you will sometimes not want this include: * An application you haven't started yet could make your desktop unusable. This is a situation which we call "spyware" * The taskbar is the only way to track changes on your desktop - Ctrl-Alt-Delete is not an acceptable solution. * For applications which need to run in the foreground, Windows clearly doesn't support that. This is a situation which we call "critical". A desktop window manager that takes full advantage of the advanced features in the Nvidia driver such as window and workspace management. Additionally, NVregistry has been redesigned to utilize the powerful capabilities of this new driver. ... No. You will have to wait until Nvidia release their proprietary driver as this will replace the current one and that may take some time. Until then stick to the open-source drivers which are supported by the open source ati and nvidia drivers. NVregistry is a utility to create and manipulate NVidia registry entries and values. It features an easy-to-use tool for creating NVidia registry entries. For example, you can create a registry entry or open/change registry value to make a program run without Desktop Window Manager (DWM) active.
