Recent developments in digital photography and the World Wide Web have created an abundance of images and videos today that blur the line between professional and amateur photography. In the past, the only way to express a photographic talent was to use a professional-caliber medium such as film. Today, professionals and professionals-to-be can take full-length photographs with the use of a smartphone or DSLR, and the technology allows for editing and processing of these images. While it's evident that a professional setting usually produces a higher-quality image in terms of color reproduction, subjects, and sharpness, a general or amateur photographer may also be able to produce something that looks like a professional image. Photoshop makes it easy to correct mistakes made when taking photographs, whether by a professional or amateur. Once these errors are addressed, the photographer can send the photo to others for comment or critique or to be used as a tutorial for others. The fundamental building blocks of digital photography, raster images, typically come in a RGB (red, green and blue) color space. However, the process of editing an image typically involves the use of images in a CMYK (cyan, magenta, yellow and black) color space.

Photoshop has recently added the ability to convert from RGB or CMYK to CMYK or RGB. Quality of digital photography has improved in the past decade and continues to improve. While the quality of DSLR and point-and-shoot cameras has increased, the quality of images shot by smartphones is also improving. As time goes by, the quality of phone pictures will likely continue to improve. Although the basic mechanics of taking a picture with a smartphone are the same as those of a camera, it is important to note that not all smartphones are created equal and there are some misconceptions about smartphones and photographs. Smartphones are not the same as film. Smartphones take still pictures, can be used for both still and video photography, provide good quality color, can be connected to computers and external storage devices, and can even upload the picture directly to a Web site. Most smartphones have small cameras and can take sharp photos that require little post-processing. While the quality of the photos varies with camera phone models, they're usually sharp and crisp.

If you want to get the best quality images from your smartphone, connect it to a computer or storage device and upload the image to a social media or blog Web site. A picture taken with a smartphone can be improved easily with Photoshop

If you need information on the software's interface, what are the versions of Photoshop and Photoshop Elements, the prices and the terms of use, this article is for you. In this article we will learn what are the differences between Photoshop CS6 and Photoshop Elements 11. As a user, I would recommend only Photoshop Elements 11. Adobe Photoshop CS6 What is Photoshop? Adobe Photoshop is one of the most powerful tools for editing images on the market. It has several different editions and versions, the latest being Photoshop CS6. It is characterized by the fact that it is integrated with a number of other tools that help you with the editing process. As a professional version of Photoshop you need to pay a license fee for Adobe

Photoshop CS6 and it has a final price of $ 650. Adobe Photoshop Elements 11 What is Photoshop Elements? Adobe Photoshop Elements is a package of tools that allow you to edit, create and print photographs. Although it is a low-cost software, the price of the final product is more than the price of the Photoshop product. As a low-cost software, Photoshop Elements 11 is available in two editions: Standard and Express. The Standard Edition includes the basic tools to edit images, a Web album, photo-books and more. In order to print or send your work,

Photoshop Elements 11 comes with several additional printing tools to make your prints more beautiful and to improve the quality of your work. As with Photoshop, Photoshop Elements also has several versions. Among the new features of Photoshop Elements 11 we find the Live Text, the Adobe Catchlight and several other features for the user. Adobe Photoshop + Adobe Photoshop Elements It is difficult to learn Photoshop Elements 11, Photoshop CS6 is more complete and has a more detailed interface and a richer set of tools. However, with

Photoshop Elements 11 there are a number of features that help you make more photos better. According to a digital image expert, the main difference between the two products is that Photoshop Elements 11 has more functions and is more customizable. I do not recommend this version, although I do not rule out the possibility of buying one on sale. Using Photoshop or Photoshop Elements One of the most important differences between the software and the interface is in the fact that Photoshop Elements is designed to be used by beginners or for those who are not so experienced with Photoshop. This version is far less complicated to use and the 05a79cecff

Sep 29, 2012 By Jeff Fizdale For the Los Angeles Lakers, there is no easier way to lose a game than to play it the way they did during the first 12 minutes of Sunday's loss to the Memphis Grizzlies. Their defense failed to make a stop on the Grizzles' first field goal and for the duration of the first quarter, they looked out of sync on both sides of the floor. In the past, the Lakers have had problems getting stops on fast-breaking teams, and that was definitely true of their matchup against the Grizzles, who had gone 8 of their last 10 games without being held below 50 points. In the first quarter, Memphis scored 16 points, and two of them were layups that came directly out of the Grizzles' fast-break offense. In the second quarter, Mike Conley and Pau Gasol did their best to keep Memphis to below 50 points, limiting the Grizzles to a season-low 16 points. Memphis came into the game with a team-best 129.9 points per 100 possessions, so when you added the Lakers' struggling defense to that statistic, it was clear the game was in trouble. As the Laker defense struggled, Bryant and the offense struggled too. Bryant had a miserable night with just 10 points on 3-of-8 shooting. For Bryant, the low shooting percentage was a problem, but the lack of production from his teammates was also concerning. Kobe had seven assists in the game, but not one of them came after a Lakers' fast break, and he had just five points. Bryant and his teammates struggled to start the game and that had a direct effect on the rest of the Lakers' offense. They were unable to get stops on defense and as a result, they weren't able to get the offense in rhythm. If the Lakers can't get stops, the offense is not going to be effective. On a night when Bryant's Lakers struggled on both ends of the floor, the coach will have to evaluate what went wrong. Is it related to the Laker's lackluster defense? Is it related to the team playing without a set starting lineup? Is it related to how the team looks when their leaders don't play as hard as they should? Or is it just a flu bug for the Lakers? I've been asked at various times this season if the Lakers have more talent than they are getting on the floor. On this night, I'm going to ask

No user interaction required. I want to know what would be the best approach to deliver the Javascript code. Can I just embed the HTML, CSS and Javascript in a single file or is it better to split them into separate files? Does that matter? Do I need to use a Content Management System (CMS) for delivering the application? A: Use the HTML5 Application cache (APC) for delivering static content. APC allows you to place cache files in specific locations on your server. That's a single file. I do not recommend using a CMS for this. That's going to introduce unnecessary work and complexity. It's best to try to keep it simple, don't create another layer on top of it for a piece of content that has a single purpose. Unless you need a special behaviour or architecture, it's fine. What I would do is this: Put the necessary JS files in a CDN (for instance, Google's) Mark up your HTML with script tags referencing the CDN The browser will fetch that CDN for the files, which eliminates the need for a local copy of
