difference between make and git? I've been toying around with make and git recently. I found that they have a few things in common. I have also read that make may be a superset of shell scripting. So what are the essential differences between make and git? How should one approach them? A: git is mostly used for version control, with make for automation of building software. git is more flexible, as it lets you manipulate files in the repository while make can only manipulate files in the current working directory. (And make can be controlled by running commands instead of writing makefiles.) A: Git is the DVCS (also called Git

More particularly, this invention relates to compositions of triazole-based compounds useful as additives for treating ferrous substrates to improve corrosion resistance. 2. Description of Related Art Many products exposed to the environment are subject to corrosion. For example, in the municipal drinking water and wastewater utilities, aqueous systems are a primary source of oxidants for metals. The oxidation of ferrous (e.g., iron) and other elements in pipelines, tanks, heat exchangers, boilers, condensers, process equipment and chemical reactors promotes the formation of corrosion products that reduce the service life of the component. The ferrous oxidation results from the action of oxygen present in the water system or from oxygen that is introduced into the system by contact with air. Among the metal corrosion products that result from oxidation of ferrous elements are iron oxides such as magnetite (Fe.sub.3 O.sub.4) and hematite (Fe.sub.2 O.sub.3), as well as iron sulfides such as iron sulfide and iron sulfite. The use of corrosion-inhibiting additives to minimize the rate of corrosion of ferrous metals exposed to aqueous environments is well-known in the art. Such corrosion-inhibiting additives are typically applied to ferrous substrates in aqueous systems by means of pre-formed, pre-mixed compositions which are added to the system at the point of treatment. Compositions of corrosion-inhibiting additives that have been employed in aqueous systems include amine-based corrosion inhibitors, such as

Retired from active dutyIranian Navy says 8 sailors rescued in explosion at port in Bushehr STOCKHOLM, Sweden — Iran's navy says eight of its sailors have been rescued after an explosion at a port in the south of the country, but that there are still at least 15 others missing. Iran's navy posted photos and videos Wednesday on its Facebook page of rescued sailors brought to the port of Bushehr on Wednesday. It says one sailor is critically injured and has been brought to a hospital, while the seven rescued are in good health. The navy says 14 sailors are missing and it fears the worst. Iranian television says the explosion occurred Tuesday during the loading of fuel at a port in Bushehr. The cause of the explosion is unclear,
